Foreword from the Commonwealth Secretary-General

The Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan has been reviewed by Education Ministers at regular intervals since its inception in 1959. Ministers have frequently commented on both the extent of support, and its impact in their own countries. Over time, the Plan has become established as a model of Commonwealth collaboration.

Much of the analysis has been quantitative. As a result, it is easy to forget that the real beneficiaries of the Plan are individuals – real people who have gone on to make a real impact in their chosen careers. This Directory provides a welcome, and often inspiring, reminder of that fact.

The 1,800 or so profiles that appear on the following pages are a remarkable testament to what can be achieved, in practice, by collaboration between member states. Moreover, as the preface that follows reminds us, they represent the tip of the iceberg. I very much hope that, as more and more of the 22,000 individuals who have benefited under the Plan are traced, we will be able to build a unique instrument of Commonwealth collaboration at individual level.

In the meantime, congratulations are due to the governments of Canada and the United Kingdom for their foresight in supporting this publication, and to the staff who have brought it to fruition. I hope that, at the 2003 Education Ministers Conference and afterwards, the Directory will receive the attention that their efforts deserve.

Don McKinnon
Commonwealth Secretary-General

Preface

Background to the CSFP

The Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan (CSFP) has been one of the most enduring outcomes of Commonwealth collaboration in education. Since its establishment, at the first Conference of Commonwealth Education Ministers in 1959, some 22,000 individuals have received awards under the Plan. Approximately 500 more benefit each year. The Plan has developed into one of the best known and prestigious award schemes in the world.

In retrospect, the CSFP founders showed great foresight, both in their decision to establish the Plan, and in the precise terms of reference given to it. In an age when, perhaps more than now, scholarship was valued for its own sake, the Plan objectives stressed the need for awards to be of practical benefit to the home country of the recipient. They stressed the need for flexibility, so that awards could include both short-term visits and high level academic study. Above all, they recognised that needs would change over time, and that the precise form of awards should evolve to reflect this.

What follows is the first published Directory of individual award holders. Its production is particularly timely for several reasons. First, it coincides with the 15th Conference of Commonwealth Education Ministers, and the first to take place in the United Kingdom since the Oxford Conference of 1959. We hope that, when Ministers come to debate the progress made by the Plan (which they have done at each of the intervening meetings), it will provide a uniquely rich source of data and inspiration.

Second, it is fitting that the publication results from collaboration between Canada and the United Kingdom. Although the Plan was formally established at Oxford, it owed much of its origins to Canada. It was at the 1958 Conference of Commonwealth Trade Ministers – the first of its type to be held in Canada – that the concept first won recognition. Prior to that it was Canadian universities that had been responsible for raising the concept with their national authorities. Since that time, the two countries have consistently been the most generous supporters of awards.

Third, publication is timely because in recent years governments have taken a welcome interest in the extent to which scholarships can be measured against their objectives, and to which their impact can be enhanced by follow-up activity. To justify investment in scholarship schemes by ‘anecdote’ – in other words reciting details of alumni who have risen to particular prominence – is no longer sufficient. We need both to know more about the career progression of much wider numbers of award holders, and find ways of engaging with them on a more regular basis. A directory of this type has a vital role to play in this process.

Nature of the Directory

Before discussing what the contents of this Directory tell us about the CSFP, it is worth pausing to recognise some of its limitations. The pages that follow are not intended to give an accurate quantitative analysis of the subsequent careers of award holders. Nor, given the size of the task in tracing such a large and diverse sample, are they comprehensive.

The Directory is divided into two sections. The first contains brief profiles of some 1,800 former award holders. This is not intended to be a ‘Who’s Who’ type of publication, which concentrates on the better-known and prestigious alumni. Rather, we have included as many as possible of those who gave permission by the closing date of July 31st 2003.

We cannot say with certainty whether the examples here represent an accurate ‘sample’ of all CSFP award holders. It might be argued that some categories are easier to trace than others, and that this could lead to a bias. Those working in particular professions, such as academic life, might have their careers more fully documented than others, as might those working in particular geographical regions. Those who have reached the very top of their profession might also be more in the public eye than others, although this does not necessarily mean, of course, that such categories are more likely to participate!

One ‘bias’, which is easy to detect, is towards those who have received their awards in the relatively recent past. Over half of those included received their awards in the past fifteen years, whilst only a quarter did so in the first twenty years of the Plan. This feature is likely to underplay, rather than exaggerate, the impact of alumni, since it is fair to assume that award holders obtain their most prominent roles towards the end of their career. Thus, although the record presented in the profiles is impressive, it is not likely to be untypically so.

Although the Directory has been published jointly by the authorities in Canada and the United Kingdom, this collaboration developed only after the respective surveys of the two countries had taken place. The questionnaires on which our data is based were designed to extract different information. Most notably, the UK survey sought more details of past career history and non-paid positions than the Canadian one. Thus, although much of the UK information (such as main publications) has been left out on the grounds of space, entries from UK based award holders tend to be longer than those of the Canadian counterparts. This should not be taken to suggest that Canadian alumni play fewer roles, for example, in public or voluntary activity. It is much more likely to reflect the nature of the information available to us. Canadian entries were also disproportionately affected by the ‘time bias’ referred to above – 89% of those whose profiles were included received their awards after 1980.

Since the authorities in Canada and the United Kingdom have compiled the Directory, the overwhelming majority of profiles inevitably involve those who have studied in these two countries. We have, however, been able to include a small number of profiles of UK based students who have held their awards in developing countries, and it is worth drawing particular attention to these. The opportunity for British students to hold Commonwealth awards in India or Jamaica, or, for that matter, for Canadians to go to Malaysia, Nigerians to Trinidad or New Zealand, Tanzanians to Mauritius or Sierra Leoneans to Brunei Darussalam, all in the name of Commonwealth Scholarships, represents one of the distinctive features of the Plan. Although a start has been made here in recording these individuals, in general we know too little about their experiences and achievements. It is to be hoped that such award holders will play a full part in the wider alumni activity, which we hope this Directory will stimulate.

Before discussing the results of the questionnaire in more detail, two further reservations should be stated. First, as investment managers are prone to point out, past records are not necessarily a guide to future performance. The founding fathers of the CSFP recognised that needs would change over time, and that the precise nature of awards would change to reflect this. At no time has this been more prevalent than in the past few years. In the late 1990s, the Canadians led the way by introducing a new category of Commonwealth Scholarship by distance learning – a model which has since been followed by the United Kingdom. Other UK innovations in recent years have included the introduction of short-term professional fellowships and split-site doctorates. Each of these developments has been intended to increase impact, relevance and accessibility. It will be some years before we can say with certainty whether these aims will be met. For now, it is sufficient to note that the alumni presented here reflect the selection methods of their respective periods as award holders.

Finally, a more general reservation. The compiling of this Directory has been undertaken largely by the core teams which administer the CSFP in the United Kingdom and Canada, supplemented by a small number of short-term staff. Although checks have taken place, where possible, to ensure the accuracy of information presented against those records already held, we have inevitably relied to a considerable extent on the accuracy of information provided by survey recipients, supplemented in places by our own knowledge and assumptions. It is possible that these factors will have led to some inaccuracies and inconsistencies in the final data presented. If so, we hope that readers will accept our apologies and receive the Directory in the spirit in which it is intended. As we state below, our intention is to maintain the information electronically in future, and any corrections or further information to be included in this exercise will be welcome.

Emerging Trends

In spite of these reservations, the evidence from award holders to date makes impressive reading. As stated above, our intention is to move beyond ‘justification by anecdote’. Nevertheless, Commonwealth Scholarships would do well under such an analysis. Taking the three careers of politics, the civil service and academia as examples, our traces have already revealed over a hundred alumni who have held the position of Cabinet Minister, Permanent Secretary or Vice-Chancellor.

Governments offer scholarships for a variety of reasons. Typically, however, they represent a balance between enlightened self-interest and a genuine desire to help others. One motive might be to ‘win friends’ in other parts of the world, who, if favourably impressed, will in turn influence policy or public opinion towards their former hosts in later life. Another might be to provide key skills to the next generation of leaders and practitioners, particularly in developing countries, as part of strategies to improve living standards there. In the case of the CSFP there is the additional hope that, by undertaking these activities in the name of the Commonwealth, we will strengthen support for that institution.

Sometimes, these aims are thought to conflict. In general, there is more overlap between them than is commonly recognised. Whether the aim is to influence others or to help them, scholarships need to attract individuals who will rise to the highest levels of their professions – where they can influence both policy and have a catalytic effect on others. This embraces senior figures in health, education and other key services, as much as it does for central government and the private sector.

One area where the interests of development policy and self-interest overlap is the general desire to ensure that award holders return to make an impact on their home country. This is not to say that scholarship holders who remain with their hosts represent a wasted investment for that country. Far from it – in an economic sense, they typically repay the investment of their award several times over during their careers, often in key shortage areas.

In reality, however, that is not the main purpose of Commonwealth Scholarships, and the terms of award issued by individual countries reflect this. Typically, award holders are required to return to their home countries as a condition of their scholarship or fellowship. Many home countries reinforce this with a ‘bond’ system, through which award holders are required to return for a specific period.

The effects of this are clear from the following profiles, which show that the vast majority of award holders do return to their home countries. In the United Kingdom, an interim survey published at the time of the last Education Ministers conference produced a figure of over 90%, whilst suggesting that this might have been slightly exaggerated by the method of tracing respondents. A subsequent survey of home country nominating agencies put the figure at 85-90%. The Canadian figure is lower – perhaps due to the proximity of the United States – but still comfortably over two-thirds.

Moreover, these figures relate to numbers of individuals currently working in their home country. Often the real situation is much more complex. Our profiles reveal several examples of alumni who have worked abroad for some years before returning to their country of origin, and others who have only moved from their country of origin several years after their CSFP award. Many of those working overseas are clearly undertaking work of relevance to their home country – for example in international organisations, NGOs or embassies. Of those pursuing academic careers abroad, several have relevant research or teaching interests, and maintain collaborations with universities in their homeland. All of these would claim that their current location does not imply a lack of concern for, or willingness to contribute to, the country from which they were nominated.

It is also interesting to note that the highest prevalence of award holders not returning home comes not from developing country students, but those from developed Commonwealth countries, who study in other developed countries. In some ways, this is not surprising. Such students tend to be slightly younger, on average, than those from developing countries, and less likely to have employment or family obligations. Some may consciously plan to work overseas during the early part of their career, others are likely to form personal attachments – a feature of awards over which the Plan administrators have little control! Movement does, however, appear to be two-way, with for example Canadians remaining in the United Kingdom and vice-versa, so can probably be attributed more to the aspirations of individuals than the relative attractions of the countries concerned generally.

In analysing the occupations of alumni, it is interesting to note the high proportion working in the public sector and, in particular, academic life. Again, this is not surprising. Some of the nominating agencies that propose candidates for the scheme actively seek those likely to contribute to the public service on their return. In the United Kingdom, significant numbers of awards are reserved for staff who are already employed in higher education. Historically, a high proportion of awards has been at doctoral level; for their recipients academic life is an obvious career path. In these circumstances, the results suggest that the Plan has met its aims.

In developing future policy, participating governments might wish to consider the extent to which alumni working in universities meet their wider objectives in supporting the Plan. Here the profiles provide interesting evidence. It is clear that those working in the sector have an excellent record in reaching the highest level of their profession. It is also reasonable to assume that most meet the criteria of having a catalytic effect – through contact with future generations or disseminating their views and ideas through publications. What is perhaps most interesting, however, is the extent to which the academics sampled were involved in a wider range of activities. In many cases, academics had been involved in other sectors also, through extensive voluntary work or wider professional networks. They were also called upon widely by domestic governments or international agencies to advise on policy or technical matters, thereby contributing both to the ‘influence’ and ‘development’ aims of scholarships described above.

Developing the Network

Governments have become more ambitious – and demanding – in their policy towards scholarships. For both the Canadian and UK authorities, it is important both that the impact of their investment can be evaluated, and that contact with award holders does not end upon graduation. We are keen to ensure that this Directory should serve to stimulate further activity.

First and foremost, we hope that the final section, which lists the names and year of some 20,000 award holders, will enable us to trace further alumni. Readers are encouraged to study the list for their particular years and countries, and let us know details of any individuals, whose profiles are not featured here, that they recognize. Once we have contacted these and obtained their consent, they will be added to the electronic version of the Directory, which will appear on the CSFP web site (www.csfp-online.org) and the Canadian CSFP scholarships website at www.scholarships-bourses-ca.org. Corrections and additions to existing entries are also welcome.

Traditionally, alumni activity for scholarship schemes has centred around newsletters, occasional receptions and events and, in some regions, local chapters. Once established electronically, the Directory offers the potential to move beyond this. It will allow direct contact between scholars across national boundaries. A project being considered by the UK authorities at present is the creation of subject and interest groups, which will allow alumni to both network and keep up to date with current developments in their field. Initiatives such as this can not only contribute to the development and ‘friend raising’ impact of scholarships referred to above, but also offer a major opportunity to promote the ideals of the Commonwealth. We believe that the Commonwealth Education Ministers, whose foresight established the Plan in 1959, would have approved, and hope that their successors, in Edinburgh forty-four years later, will share this enthusiasm.

Acknowledgements

The collection of data for this directory, and its organisation into the format produced here, has been a substantial exercise, spread over several months. Thanks are due to many individuals for contributing, in many cases fitting in the time to do so alongside their other duties.

Within the UK, production was coordinated by Julie Stackhouse and Irene Costello. It was, however, a genuine team effort involving, at various stages, Liz Walden, Prithi Kanakamedala, Adrian Flaherty, Nital Jethalal, Lisa Voyce and the ACU support team. Sue Kirkland, Paul Turner, Helen Elmes, Andrew Aitken and Matthew Grange of the ACU Yearbook team provided essential expertise on production issues, as well as editorial assistance. Mike Brodbelt, Iain Tatch, Arvinder Sansoa and Katherine Spice provided critical technical support, whilst the ACU Librarian Nick Mulhern was a valuable source of information in several areas. William Sandeford was responsible for design issues. Jonathan Jenkins, Jay Kubler and colleagues in the Awards department also made important contributions at various stages in the process, whilst the collection of data benefited greatly from previous studies organised by Mary Denyer and Tony Wildsmith. Mary Searle-Chaterjee, a former UK scholar in India, also contributed important information regarding other British scholars who studied in South Asia.

The Canadian survey was coordinated by Marc L'Ecuyer, Luc Asselin and colleagues at the International Council for Canadian Studies (ICCS). Nancy Hector of the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade (DFAIT) was responsible for instigating the work and subsequent coordination. Invaluable assistance was also provided by Piers Stainforth of DFAIT. DFAIT also made a valuable financial contribution to the final production, as did the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Commonwealth Scholarship Commission in the United Kingdom.

Thanks are due to all of the above, but perhaps our greatest gratitude should be reserved for the hundreds of individuals throughout the world who have taken the time to return their questionnaires, or provide information regarding other scholars. It is their enthusiasm, most of all, which has made the project worthwhile.

Notes on the data

This publication has two main sections. The first gives profiles of around 1,800 award holders who returned this information, listed alphabetically. The second is a register of names of some 20,000 award holders, listed by host country and then by country of nomination.

Profiles

This data has been compiled from questionnaires returned to the Commonwealth Scholarship agencies in the UK and Canada. Existing information on the award held has also been used. Although reasonable care has been taken to check information given in questionnaires against our records it has frequently been necessary to rely on the accuracy of the information provided.

Country. The country, given in brackets after an individual's name, refers to their country of nomination, which is not always the same as their country of origin.

Scheme. Commonwealth Scholar refers to all studies at undergraduate, master's or doctoral level, and includes early postdoctoral research awards; Commonwealth Fellow refers to awards at postdoctoral level made to University staff and other mid-career professionals. Both categories contain other award types such as Medical Scholarships and Medical Fellowships.

Course of study. For studies in the UK, degree, subject, institution and dates of award are taken from existing data and reflect our records of the course studied while on the Commonwealth award. This does not necessarily reflect qualifications gained, and may not be the highest qualification of the individual. For studies in Canada, in addition to existing data, supplementary information has been taken from questionnaires returned by scholars. For entries for award holders studying in other countries we have taken information on studies only from the questionnaires.

Institution. Institutions are generally referred to by their current names, which may have changed since the period of award.

Dates of study. For studies in the UK, dates reflect the period of the award rather than the dates that the award holder was in the country. For awards prior to 1988 the end date reflects the date on which studies were completed. Where an award holder has held two awards and only one set of dates is shown this includes both awards.

Currently/ Previously. These sections contain information on employment, other offices and certain memberships. Positions which appeared to be ongoing into 2003 are listed as current. Unless otherwise stated, posts and awards were held in the country that nominated the individual for his or her award.

Awards. Respondents were not asked specifically to provide information on other awards, therefore the majority of entries do not have this section. However, where this information was volunteered, we have included it.

Register

This data has been compiled from: the Commonwealth Scholarship Commission's records of awards taken up in the UK and of outbound UK students; Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan reports up to 1992 and information provided by certain country agencies for studies post-1992. The list is not complete as we do not yet have data on all scholars going to all countries post-1992. Names marked with an asterisk indicate that the individual has a profile in this publication.

Country. Award holders are listed by host country followed by country of nomination. Countries are referred to by their present names. However, in some cases it was not possible to determine the corresponding individual present-day location. For example, in some cases the Plan reports listed a region, or two countries combined. In the case of pre-1971 award holders listed as nominated by Pakistan it was not possible to determine whether these were from what is now Bangladesh. Hong Kong was part of the Commonwealth until 1997. Some former protectorates are included in the Plan reports that are not part of the present-day Commonwealth.

Names. Names were presented in various formats in the Plan report and in some cases no forename was given. We have incorporated changes of name where this is known.

Year. This refers to the year in which the award was taken-up.

Publication of this Directory forms part of a continuing process to encourage contact between former CSFP award holders. Details of current activities will be posted on the alumni section of the CSFP international web site, at www.csfp-online.org.

The site also includes a form on which alumni details can be completed and submitted electronically. Alternatively, information and comments can be sent to:
